REMARKS

Why wait a year for a Rose Garden?

Plant "POTTED ROSES" now

EVERY YEAR there are many lovers of Roses, who through no fault of their own, find themselves too late to plant Dormant Roses, and are faced with the possibility of having to wait a year for a Rose Garden.

To meet such a contingency we provide for these late planters by potting up thousands of dormant, 2-year old, budded, field-grown Roses, early in the season, develop them (without forcing) in cold frames, and now have a splendid lot of sturdy, growing, well-rooted plants that can be removed from the pots and planted out (with ball of earth complete) whereby they receive no check, and will bloom as profusely for the rest of the season as the early-planted dormant stock. These plants can also be used for replacing any failures that may have occurred in beds or borders planted in the Spring.

Quantities and varieties of these potted Roses are limited, so that we advise immediate ordering, with the privilege of substituting varieties of similar color for those that may be sold out.
